Supply Chain Management (SCM) plays a crucial role in Bangladesh's economic development, especially as the country transitions from a Least Developed Country (LDC) to a middle-income nation. It enhances industrial efficiency by streamlining operations in key sectors like garments, pharmaceuticals, and agriculture, thereby boosting productivity and reducing waste. Efficient SCM also strengthens Bangladesh's export competitiveness, particularly in the Ready-Made Garments (RMG) sector. In agriculture, SCM supports food security and rural livelihoods by ensuring timely delivery of inputs and minimizing post-harvest losses. The healthcare sector benefits from SCM through improved availability of essential medicines and supplies, leading to better public health outcomes. Moreover, SCM fosters economic integration by connecting producers, suppliers, and consumers, and promotes technological adoption through digital tools and automation. As Bangladesh faces post-LDC challenges, a robust supply chain system will be essential for reducing lead times and operational costs, enhancing transparency and compliance, and sustaining growth in increasingly competitive global markets.
